Try using just the left-hand low E key (without F key down) in bar 20-21 as it makes the E-G smoother.
Although the melody in bar 30 is tongued, think of joining each note by pushing the air through so that they don't sound too detached.

Let It Go (Flute)

Demi Lovato
Arr. Kallyn O'Brien

Let it go, let it go
Can't hold it back a - a - ny more

Let it go, let it go
Turn my back and slow the door

The snow-glass white on the mountain top
The heat is gone, the sun is faint, the sky is dim
The queen is long gone, I am the one now
The wind is howling like a wild, ungodly storm
I'm a little bit of a rebel, just like old-time, salty sea
Don't let them in, don't let them see
Be the good girl you always have to be
Well now they know, Let it go, Let it go

Chords? Dusty Springfield solved to write letters in his hands, which explained many of the idiosyncratic movements of his arm (still not all letters, of course, they just remember). Changes, riffs and structure that I can remember even if months have passed. Obviously? With jazz musicians, variable. I do not play in any band where I need to memorize anything or have time to memorize any repertoire. I don't care if a cat looks an Armani suit on stage and all the demig . If I am stopping in the short term, I can draw chords/form, especially for songs that I don't know. The sections of the horn, or the contracted backup musicians, or the types of players that generally read, I think they are well using supports, but they are supporting other users without service, it would be better if they memorize everything that is PHTOTIC/POSSIBLE. I find him making more mistakes, since he confesses to them as a crutch in front of the memory of practical/mismlal ... I have a leaf of tricks for the configuration of the pedal. Do not know if this is a fair opinion. I can't remember them well for any reason. For rock concerts on the guitar, memorizo á ċ .á ċ. Everything. There is also a sad fact that I am definitely a very lazy person, so very often I simply know my parts well enough and I must have hand reminders. When I used to play in a jazz group, I always trusted the main synic, sometimes only chords. The bassist has been with us at least 15 years. Frustrating dynamics, I have leafy leaves on my feet all the time or attached to the monitors. Sá. I felt much more in control. Surely because it is your They are not hired officials to perform a task, servants of the great composer, slaves to the score. Lyrics Chords and Changes, I remember. It is certainly acceptable to see the music in a jazz jazz And it would be expected for a great band, or any band that touches written arrangements. Otoh, there are certain songs that simply do not sink into my memory, they will not adhere to neurons or whatever), so I do, I have graphics, sometimes scores, it depends. In rock, blues and folk, it is not expected, and rarely acceptable (IMO). However, a solo vocalist who sings is known as it should not be. With the graph, I would have to read linearly. bar by bar; Without the graph, I had to sustain everything in my head, I had a broader view, the most large image, a better one in the form. I think that any soloist or pop style (an autonomous band) should not use supports/screens, or any other obvious memory aid on stage, with the exception of the members who are subs, etc. I am sure that our bassist really knows the songs well enough, in some place of his head. Add this: when memory game, I can concentrate on other things that are necessary to make a good spectan and I am sure in my game. The voice is not my main instrument, but I generally have my letters memorized before the "main" singer in most cases. Warren Haynes does not only do it ... after some time began to think that it was time for him to know some of those memory standards, and I was trying without the lists. We almost never do new songs. For me, the big problem is to try to remember every part of the 40 songs we played on one night, and what 3 or 4 effects I need to use in each melodi. It has definitely helped my reading skills, but I still cost the noting notation to read the view in time. I have two keyboards that use different ones to select sounds, so everything that should be written. Right? Every opportunity that I have if there is alf material that I still have to learn ... Why important that they eat all their material to memory? I memorize everything else in the keys that are easy or that I learned with much anticipation, anticipation.Some of the things I've written now I remember. Last edited: November 19, 2014 I do it for acoustic shows. It depends how well I know the melodies in question. The same thing if I play a wedding, mostly classical, I bring music. Which is a problem when you keep all the songs in the same lumped file... but still use a pad. I'm playing keys in a band, and I'm not that good at it, so I've written some of the most intensive parts. Yes, I have a sheet with the structure of the song on the floor, in case I faint. Obviously, in situations where players usually read and most of the group will have booths (Band de Jazz, etc.), then I have no problem with any other player using a stand, is expected. If they sound good, most people will dig it no matter what... But, the main thing is, I need all the patch numbers to select sounds. Others would have written words on the back of the stage accessories. When I play with this local light jazz group, I read ready for the "Jazz" melodies, but I only touch most of Motown's stuff of ear. But there are still some that I have to read and actually stumble upon me if I look across the page... In my opinion, they look stupid when you're doing pop/rock covers, which is what we do, so I keep My notes on the floor, behind the monitor. What is interesting to me is what is expected in different genres. I'm always disappointed when I see rock musicians using trick leaves (or more likely screens these days). Control! Learn the damn song, or don't! A lot of songs you know! (I prefer that you forgot the lyrics and muttered something, or repeated a verse, that you have to look to remember all the time.)
